MALVIYA ROAD, RAIPUR, CHHATTISGARH

Muni Agam Sagar Maharaj's Sangh Enters Raipur's Digambar Jain Bada Mandir After 18-Year Gap — "Historic" Mangal Kalash Sthapana

Param Pujya Muni 108 Shri Agam Sagar Ji Maharaj and his monastic sangh entered the Shri Digambar Jain Bada Mandir on Malviya Road, Raipur, for the "Shri Navodaya Teerth Varshayog 2026" -- the first time in 18 years, per the organizing committee, that a muni sangh has taken chaturmas residence at this specific temple. Haribhoomi's own headline calls it "historic." The published schedule ran a kalash yatra (ceremonial pot procession) at 8 AM, abhishek (ritual idol-bathing) and shanti-dhara at 9 AM, and the main Mangal Kalash Sthapana ceremony with cultural programs at 1 PM.

A two-line Hale Kannada/Sanskrit inscription was found embedded in a step-wall at the Mallikarjun Temple on August 6, identified by independent inscription researcher Krushna Gudade. It records the construction of a "Vijay Parshvanath Jinalaya" (Jain temple/basadi) by monk Subhasena Muni of the Yapaniya Sangha. Five Rare Jain Inscriptions Discovered at Historic Kote Basadi in Karkala

During renovation work at the historic Kote Basadi, researchers found five previously unrecorded Jain inscriptions engraved on Jain idols and on the base of a shrutaskandha (a stand for sacred scripture). A three-line inscription records that a person named "Vigna," son of Hegade, commissioned an object for the basadi; a separate Devanagari-script inscription on the pedestal of a marble Parshvanatha Tirthankara statue records the statue's installation during the 17th century CE. Together the inscriptions push back documented continuous Jain worship at the site to the 14th-15th century. Ayurvedic doctor Dr. P. Satyanarayana Bhat alerted a research team led by Prof. S.A. Krishnaiah of Udupi's Prachya Sanchaya Research Centre.

PARASNATH HILLS (SAMMED SHIKHARJI), GIRIDIH DISTRICT, JHARKHAND

Sammed Shikharji Dispute: "Har Har Mahadev" Chants and "Parshuram Temple" Claims Reignite Jain-Tribal Tensions Over Sacred Site's Identity

On August 19, a video circulated showing a group of visitors chanting "Har Har Mahadev" while trekking up Parasnath Hills -- the site Jains revere as Sammed Shikharji, where 20 of the 24 Tirthankaras are believed to have attained moksha, making it Jainism's most sacred pilgrimage site. In the video, a Jain woman pilgrim confronts the group. Separately, some visitors were recorded on social media describing the summit shrine as a "Parshuram Temple," asserting the site's religious identity is linked to the Hindu sage Parshuram. The Jain community's stated concern is not the chanting alone but that repeated ritual assertions plus a competing origin-claim could eventually be used to argue a competing claim over the site itself -- a fear rooted in the community's long-running fight (since a 2019 Jharkhand government notification and continuing through 2023 protests) against the hill's designation as an eco-tourism zone, which Jains say invites commercialization and conduct they consider disrespectful to the shrine. Jain community protests over the August incident were reported in Mumbai, Ahmedabad, Bhopal, New Delhi, and Surat, and the Centre reportedly asked the Jharkhand state government to maintain the site's sanctity. On the other side, tribal (Santhal) organisations -- including the Marang Buru Bachao Sangharsh Morcha and a group identified as ASA -- pushed back, asserting the hill is their own sacred site, known to them as "Marang Buru," and pointing to historic customary/ancestral rights recognised in a 1911 Privy Council precedent; ASA was reported threatening a stir across five states over the dispute. The National Commission for Minorities has separately received representations on Parasnath-related issues. Based on all available reporting, this remained a verbal, protest, and social-media dispute -- no injury or physical confrontation was reported on either side.
